Background

Will there be eventually a “European Russia or a Russian Europe” in terms of security dependence?

The case/fate of Ukraine may well decide about the future (Security system) of Europe and beyond.

All crises throughout Europe and elsewhere, esp. in its vicinity (E, S) become somehow interactive over time independent of subject and location.

The Ukraine Conflict does not appear to currently top the American Strategic priorities.

The longer the conflict lasts, the more radical and potentially extensive it will become - the more difficult it will be to be resolved. The increasing relevance in politics of the Russian Orthodox Church.
